AMPUTATION RECOMMENDED

But a Better, Safer Method Found.

For twenty years I was an awful sufferer from Varicose veins and ulcers on my leg. For twelve winters I sat in a chair, my leg pained me so I could not lie down.

The doctors began to say I would never use it again.

Others advised amputating my leg to prevent gangrene from setting in.

One day I read of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I bought a bottle and commenced taking it.

And I surely believe if I had not taken Favorite Remedy I would not be alive today. My leg healed up entirely and I am now well and strong.

JOSEPH H. MULCOX, 377 Church St., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
A prominent physician of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in explaining the demand for this King of kidney, liver, bladder and blood medicines, said: "Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy acts as a nerve and blood food. It has made many permanent cures of nervous debility, sleeplessness, dyspepsia, rheumatism and of the sicknesses peculiar to women, where other treatments have failed. For headaches, constipation and that run down condition, there is nothing else half so good as this great kidney and liver medicine."

Druggists sell it in New 50 Cent Size and the regular $1.00 size bottles.

A Great Medicine
Has Used "L. F." Twenty Years and Never Found Its Equal

"I have used the 'L. F.' Atwood's Bitters in my family for twenty years and consider it a great medicine. I have tried medicines of all descriptions for liver trouble but never found anything equal to the genuine 'L. F. Medicine.'"
Ferry A. Ricker, East Fairfield, Maine

The True "L. F." Medicine Cures Constipation and all the ills that Follow in Its Train

Thoughts on a Night in June.

I sat on the banks of a river,
One night in early June,
And over the distant hills
Came the moon, the rising moon.

I thought as I watched it ascending
The sky on that summer's night,
And as it slowly rose
And the earth with its silvery light:

How vast is the greatness and goodness
Of Him who rules on high,
That He in His infinite wisdom
Had set the moon in the sky.

Foreseeing the needs of His children
He placed it there that they Might have a light to guide them
By night as well as day.

And while I still sat watching,
A cloud of blackest hue
Passed silently over the face of the moon
And hid it from my view.

And I thought how we might liken
Our lives to that night in June,
At times all bright with silvery light,
When soon, ah, all too soon

A cloud of darkest sorrow
Comes suddenly to our noon,
Enveloping us in the deepest night
Like the cloud that hid the moon.

But what is that passing vision
On the changeable life of man,
That cloud so black that rolled away
And hid the moon from my view again?

And I took it as an emblem
That our sorrows would all pass by
Like the cloud that hid the moon,
The moon in that fair June sky.

And we have this thought to comfort
By, sleeplessness, and sorrow,
That when we dwell on our way
Where all night is lost in day,
Our lives are but what is now the
With a splendor all unknown,
And our sorrows will all pass away
Like the cloud that hid the moon.

Loss of Appetite
Is commonly a gradual one; one dish after another is set aside with few remain. These are not eaten with much relish, and are often so light as not to afford much nourishment.

Loss of appetite is one of the first indications that the system is running down, and there is nothing so good for it as Hood's Sarsaparilla—the best of all tonics.

WEST LOVELL.
Roscoe LeBaron has been to Lewiston on a visit.

M. A. LeBaron has been to Bridgton on business.

A number of people from this way are working in the cornshops at the village and North Fryeburg.

Amos McIntire and wife were at McAllister's one day recently. He went to Stoneham and looked over the cattle pastured there.

A Newspaper's Centennial.

The Daily Eastern Argus of Portland, issued Saturday, Sept. 19, a centennial number consisting of 48 pages with a cover. The first sixteen pages are the history of the past century, its present appearance, with photographs of business and public blocks, and last but not least, the history of those who have held the editor's chair, the counting room, news-editor's chair, and the mechanical staff, and a reproduction of the first page of its initial issue.

The first issue of the Eastern Argus was Sept. 8, 1803, by Calvin Day and Nathaniel Willis, Jr. Little is known of the former, who dropped out of the partnership in 1805. The latter was father of Nathaniel P. Willis, second to Longfellow in Portland's famous poet corner, and of Fanny Fern, a pioneer woman writer.

In 1835, the Argus began daily editions, first as an evening paper, but soon the time of issue was changed to morning to get the late news from Boston, which came by sailing vessels and the newly opened steam-packet line. There were no railroads or telegraphs.

Among the list of editors are Seba Smith, native of Buckfield, editor for four years, commencing about 1820. F. O. Smith, builder of the Portland Falls Railroad, edited for a few years from 1830. Hon. George F. Emery of Paris was an editor-awriter on the paper. The late John M. Adams was proprietor 36 years.

The Argus is now owned by a corporation of which Oscar R. Wish is manager and treasurer.

The Argus has always been a staunch and strenuous Democratic paper. In the early days, with partisanship bitter, but with the change in conditions of modern days, while not abating in decisiveness, it is fair and courteous to opposing parties. It has kept up-to-date in material equipment with linotypes and perfecting presses, and in its news department stands well in the front rank of Maine newspapers.

Extensive Repairs.
The town is making quite extensive repairs on what is known as the Alvah Gammon hill in this place. They have raised the bridge at the bottom of the hill, and are taking off the top of the hill to fill up the hollow where the bridge is. It will be much better, as it was a hard place for loaded teams.

Mrs. Scott, the nurse who has been taking care of Mrs. Will Farrington, returned to her home in Massachusetts, Monday.

The Garcelons have been giving their many friends in this locality, some very enjoyable trips in their steamer, the Esther G., the past week, the same being greatly enjoyed by all who accepted their kind invitations.

STRONGEST EVIDENCE OF FAITH.

Frank Kimball Guarantees That Hymel Will Cure the Worst Case of Catarrh in Norway.

When one of the most reputable concerns in Norway guarantees that a medicine will effect a cure or he will refund the money, it speaks volumes as to the merits of that remedy. It is in this way that Frank Kimball is selling Hymel, the treatment that he made so many remarkable cures of both acute and chronic catarrh in Norway and vicinity.

Hymel is not a pill nor is it a liquid that has to be taken with a tablespoon or wineglass. Just breathe it by the aid of an inhaler that comes in every outfit and benefit will be seen from the first treatment.

It destroys all germ life in the air passages and lungs and enriches and purifies the blood with additional ozone. It cures catarrh of the head and throat, or of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Wherever you breathe Hymel will do its work.

Remember that if Hymel does not cure you, Frank Kimball will refund your money. This is a good time to cure catarrh by this natural method and prevent catarrhal colds that are so common at this season.

Artistic Monuments
Cost no more than plain ones in White Marble.

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown. Colored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. White Marble is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost and moss growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Why not invest in marble? In fact, it is on the market a long time. Many granite dealers have bought White Marble for their own use and want to see to it that you have not lost sight of it. When you have passed on something that will honor them by putting up something that will last when you have passed on. Provide for yourself while alive and well.
On receipt of a postal card, I shall be pleased to call with drawings and samples of White Marble.

"Race Suicide."

Race suicide, race suicide! It is a sound and long. A difficulty to decide. If it be right or wrong. The question is not wide, For prejudice is strong. While children of the city poor Play in the city streets, For them no open school-house door. Awaiting to drive them. We hardly need a cup of breeding more, To drive out shame complete. While criminals bring forth their young, While truants play their game, While paupers' beds broadcast are flung, What need we of more sorrow? No signs of suicide among them. No, indeed! And while child-labor far and wide Our native land disgraces, We wait to drive the race. We wait to drive the race. We wait to drive the race. But ah, we never waste the time Upon mere human mothers, Tost to the winds of the time brood, Until the heavy smother, Upon the coming of the human heir, You wonder, Oh my brothers, You wonder that we hesitate To drive the race. Amongst environment of hate A "Jewry" is a word; And race conditions, such as that, Are suicide made.

Never Look for Trouble.

The really unhappy man, whose unhappiness is his own fault, is the one who is forever carrying "a chip upon his shoulder." Perhaps his unhappiness is his unhappiness, for when he is not engaged in a personal altercation he is provoking over some fancied slight and awaiting a favorable opportunity to give vent to his wrath.

The man with the chip on his shoulder is easily recognized and his society is wise people are carefully avoided. He can go to where without trouble following in his wake. If he attends a theatre he is either annoyed by the usher or someone in the audience or at the man in the box office for not having sold him a seat long before he appeared at the window.

He is the bar of the car conductor and the train he succeeds in embroiling himself in a row with the brakeman, conductor, Pullman car porter and passengers. Each flying cinder from the locomotive is aimed especially at his eyes and he succeeds in stirring up the spirits of many of the travelers.

There are some women similarly constituted whose moment their eyes open in the morning till they close them in sleep. These people are indeed to be pitied, if indeed, they are not cordially hated. This quarrelsome habit of mind grows to be a malignant disease and leads sometimes to the lunatic asylum.

Parents who notice in their children the first faint gleam of disposition can easily find a remedy. They may not agree to the measure—simply a good sound thrashing. Every one has heard of the story of the child who quarreled. In vainly whimpering and quarreling. "Are you despairing the mother?" "Gravely sick?" "What do you want?" "I think mamma, I want a whipping." She received the whipping and there was a marked improvement in her temper.

The Type of Girl that

Is the Most Loveable.

Certainly she is not the blue-stocking crammed with information in an undigested form, neglectful of her person, sallow of skin, contemptuous of those graces which are to womanhood what the scent is to the lily or the color to the rose.

If you could induce her to forget how clever she was, or lose sight of it yourself for half a minute, she might be lovely; but the clever woman is always insisting upon her cleverness—at least, the so-called clever woman of today, who is really the most stupid woman of all time, says McCall's Magazine.

Not the beauty, because handsome is as handsome does, and the prettiest girls are often the shallowest and the vainest.

Not the society girl, always in a whirl, the devotee of balls and private theatricals, thirsting for publicity, rushing wildly from one thing to another, depending for happiness upon excitement.

Not the meek, colorless girl who says "Yes, dear," to everything, and is only too ready to make a foolproof of herself for man to put his feet on.

Not the Martha-like maiden, harrassed about household affairs, whose burning ambition is to live in a large house, and who regards a husband more or less as an adjunct to it.

Not the rapid girl, with her dogs, her chums and her cigarettes.

Not the exacting girl, quick and passionate of temper, jealous of every other woman, suspicious to an insane degree, always fancying some neglect and resenting it.

Not the sharp-tongued girl, with the quick repartee and the witty sarcasm.

Not the smart girl, with her frequent changes of costume, her inordinate extravagance and her devotion to fashion.

The most loveable type of girl is the sympathetic one; the girl who is glad of a man's protection, his arm across a street, his help over a stile, his assistance in carrying parcels, his escort to the theater—the girl who could stand alone, if she had to do it, but who greatly prefers to be spared the necessity.

The girl who can spend a month at home and stay in every night without being dull or bored.

The girl who can darn socks, fix buttons, and, at a pinch, adjust a patch.

The girl who can see good in everything, who has a large heart and a kindly, amiable nature.

She may be dark or fair, slender or well developed, grave or gay, tall or short—for there is no special mark which distinguishes the most loveable type of girl; the only way in which she may be known is by the multitude of those who love her.

When you find a girl who has kept the friends she made at her first school, for whom other women would do almost anything, the sunshine of home and the delight of old people and children, you may be sure you have found the most loveable type of girl.

After the Explosion.

"I saw Fuddlesome running down the street this morning," says the first suburbanite. "What was the matter?"

"He was going for a veterinary surgeon and a machinist," explains the second suburbanite.

"What was wrong?"

"Last night he went out to his stable to see that everything was all right and incidentally to fix his bay mule and his automobile for the night. You know how careless he is?"

"Yes, but—"

"Well, now the mule has gasolinitis and the auto has hay fever."—Judge.

What It Was.

"Is this drinking water?" asked the dyspeptic looking chap guardedly.

"It is, for human beings," replied the chap who reads industriously, "but according to scientists it is merely a bathing pool for bacilli, microbe germs and other voracious atoms!"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

It Pays.

"Some people," said the Rev. Mr. Goodman, "can never be made to appreciate the value of religion."

"That's right," replied Pecksniff, the merchant; "they don't know how to catch the church trade at all."—Catholic Standard and Times.

A Delicate Subject.

A Large Order.

Probably the largest order ever given for paint in the State of North Carolina, was received by the Odell Hardware Co., of Greensboro, N. C., from W. A. Irwin, Esq., of Durham.
The order was for 5,000 gallons of Devco lead-and-zinc paint, to be used on the large Irwin Mills and their cottages now being built in Harnett county.
Many of the leading paint manufacturers were eager to secure this order, and it speaks volumes that the preference was given to Devco lead-and-zinc, which is undoubtedly the foremost paint in this country to-day.

Big Crowds at Canton.

The annual fair of the Androscoggin Valley opened under happiest auspices Tuesday. The weather was ideal. There was one of the best cattle exhibits ever seen on the grounds. The midway was a great attraction and kept things merry. The officers of the Androscoggin Valley Agricultural Society for the year 1933 are: President, J. W. Thompson, Canton; vice president, W. W. Rose, Canton; secretary, C. M. Richardson, Canton; treasurer, D. W. Goding, East Peru; division superintendents—grounds, lots and gates, E. F. Caldwell; forage master, J. K. Welch; stock, A. F. Russell, E. E. Merritt; horses, W. S. Marble, C. S. Childs; hall, T. B. C. Stetson, Canton; committees—L. B. Bisbee, W. W. Rose, tickets, J. W. Thompson.

The regulations of the society this year restrict the entries to thoroughbreds, except to dairy purposes. Thus many head of cattle were barred out, and many who would otherwise exhibit good stock were not present. It is understood, moreover, that such former exhibitors are rather aggrieved.

Poultry was largely exhibited. Of the 60 coops, 37 were from Farmington, exhibited by Bradbury and Tarbox. The exhibit included all kinds of poultry.

Canton and West Peru Granges had fine exhibits in the hall.

Across the field the outlook showed the usual number of tents, fairs' stands and fair followers.

The Races.

The races here Tuesday were pulled off under favorable circumstances with about the usual sized crowd for the first day. In the 2.45 class, Goldfinger Boy owned by R. D. Waite, Lewiston, was a winner in three straight heats; Hector Wilkes, second; Chick, third; and Vals Belle, fourth.

The exciting race of the day proved to be the 2.24, five heats being necessary to determine the results.

Four horses—Raven Wilkes, The Deak, Bingham and Orphan Wilkes—started. The Deak took the first two heats with Raven Wilkes in second place. But the latter reversed positions with the former in the third, fourth and fifth heats, winning the race. Bingham was third and Orphan Wilkes, fourth. The summaries:

2.45 Class—Best Three in Five.
Goldfinger Boy, b. g., Waite.....1 1 1
Hector Wilkes, b. g., Small.....2 3 2
Chick, ch. g., Brown.....2 3 4
Vals Belle, b. m., Worthley.....4 4 3
Time—2.24, 2.29, 2.30.

2.24 Class—Best Three in Five.

EAST STONEHAM.

A Bad Smash-up.

There was quite a smash-up in the highway just above Bartlett's store, Tuesday evening of last week. As Mr. Kendall of Lovell had just left the store for home, having a heavy express wagon and a load of grain, he met two teams coming down the street at a rapid rate. It was very dark. One team passed all right, but the other, driven by Loren G. McKeen, came in collision with Kendall's, breaking both wagons and throwing out the occupants. Mrs. McKeen, shaken out of her wagon, severely injured and lamed. For some time she was unable to stand. The breaching was torn from Kendall's horse and Mr. Kendall (an elderly man) was dragged out over the dasher in trying to keep his horse from getting away. His back was lamed in the accident. Mr. McKeen's horse ran a short distance before being caught. It is fortunate that no one was killed in the darkness of the evening.

Some of our townspeople visited at Norway during the fair.

Levi McAllister is making quite extensive repairs on his dwelling house.

keeping at West Paris.

TROUBLES OF CHILDHOOD.

Worms, the Often Unsuspected Cause of Children's Ills.
If mothers fully realize the extent to which worms affect the health and disposition of children, many a child that is scolded and punished for peevishness, and doctored and doped with blunders or any one of half a dozen other imaginary ailments, would be treated along entirely different lines. On the other hand, many mothers, while understanding the cause of the trouble, regard it, like cutting teeth, as one of the natural and unavoidable conditions of childhood.

BY AID OF THE DICTIONARY

By ELIZABETH KEMPSTER

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure.

The note of a horn, the snap of a whip, and the great coach swayed out upon the winding road, gay atop with bright steamer robes and trunks bedecked with multicolored labels; inside, the blase interest of middle age and the bright alertness of the young girl, reaching out eagerly for new experiences—strange scenes.

Jane and the Elderly Ones made a comfortable party of three, and had settled themselves for the journey. But a few miles on in the valley, as they stopped at the little town of Andermatt, the empty seat was filled—a man had stepped in upon them with a courteous word of apology for his invasion. He spoke in German, was young and good looking and carried the mark of universities about him. The great shoulders drooping ever so little in their long cape coat, spoke of the student, and his cavernous pockets bulged with fat volumes to be read en route.

But the calm eyes of the German met Jane's shadowy orbs at the second mile, and forthwith the wicked little blind god began his mischievous work. It was frank and open love from the first with meinherr. Jane parried at first as best she might. But after awhile her round American chin went up, and she snared her bird with deliberation, while the chaperons looked on with amazement. That the young student knew no word of English and Jane not a word of German lent a certain piquancy to the situation, but proved in no way an obstacle. The Elderly Ones, at least understood and spoke in the foreign tongue, and to them the young man addressed himself while to Jane the dark, expressive eyes had a language all their own.

Never was such a gallant and courteous traveling companion. He told anecdotes of the country through which they were traveling, smothered the ladies with edelweiss and the alpine roses which the peasants sold at the roadside, and at the various stops ordered impossible dishes for their delectation.

As the panting horses drew their load slowly upward over the tortuous road the coach seemed a speck on the bare, brown face of the mountain. The valley lay like a toy below, the rocks lifted gaunt peaks into the unnatural air and huge feathery tufts of cloud hung sluggishly in the shadows.

The young man drank in long breaths of exhilaration and drew the robes more cozily about Jane's shoulders as the atmosphere grew colder. And suddenly a great wave of sympathy, of unspoken tenderness, swept subtly between the two. They seemed alone together in this uncanny upper air. The world was beginning, and this rugged, rugged bit of earth about them was pregnant with strange things—unutterably sweet. Just once to have drawn near to her, to have wrapped her close and felt those perilous tawny waves of her hair against his lips—that would have been worth a life.

Once the Paris veil came loose and for a moment his long, strong fingers fought with its little jeweled pin and fastened it into place again. Jane laughed and called him clumsy, in English, but she felt the thrill of proximity.

The inhospitable little hostelry in Furka's pinnacle did its prettiest for the travelers in the way of rest and refreshment. The Elderly Ones accepted gratefully the half hour's break in the long sitting journey. Jane and her German walked about in smiling and understanding silence, his eyes following her little movements hungrily and with open admiration.

When the fresh horses were harnessed and the shabby old coach stood waiting once more seats were resumed. Presently it was found that the student had by some unknown means possessed himself of an English and German dictionary, and it was through this humble instrument that the charmed silence was broken.

For the rest of the way Jane and her cavalier sustained a spirited conversation. That this method of communication was somewhat slow and laborious (for each word of a sentence must be looked out separately) in no way marred their interest. And as the day waxed names, addresses and bits of their respective histories were exchanged to mutual satisfaction. Fingers touched inadvertently and lingered ever so little in the shadow of a dictionary, and knowledge of each other grew apace.

That the girl was under their careful espionage was enough for the Elderly Ones, and when the young German presented his credentials the name was found to be a very old and illustrious one, so they were content.

The descent on the farther side of the pass, the stupendous panorama of the Rhone valley, with its weird, glittering mystery of virgin ice, were clearly lost upon two of the passengers, for the little struggling village of Gletsch lay a spot just below—Gletsch and a parting of ways.

The sepulchral looking hall of the Glacier hotel made rather a gloomy setting for the end of the little drama. The young German must take his own way, while Jane must go hers with the Elderly Ones. The two clasped hands for several long minutes while they said goodbye wistfully and without the dictionary, and when the blue eyes looked away from the brown ones they were suspiciously bright. But the great broad shoulders stooped suddenly over Jane, and their owner whispered tenderly a magic word into her waiting ear. It was "Auf wiedersehen."

That Jane should be snapped up unceremoniously in her first season by a bold and unknown foreign count was a matter of much comment and no little regret among her friends at home. It was in vain they tried by various means to learn the romantic details of her short engagement. But the broad, distinguished figure of the foreigner certainly made a handsome and striking background for Jane's glistening wedding gown. And they were married with the aid of the dictionary too!

Superstitions of Scotch Fishermen.
Some still existing superstitions among Scotch fishermen are as follows: At the beginning of the herring season the crew all try to seize the herring first on board to see if it be a male or female. If it is a male their fishing may be expected to be a poor one; if a female, a good one. Sometimes, however, the skipper secures it and hides it away, salting it and laying it aside for the season. The boat must not be turned against the sun.

Certain animals considered of ill omen must not be spoken of in the boat, and ministers in this respect occupy the same place as rabbits, hares and pigs. Fishermen do not like to lend anything to a neighboring boat lest their luck should go with it. If they lend a match they will contrive secretly if possible to break it and keep part, hoping thereby to retain their luck. Their dislike to have anything stolen is increased by the fear that the thief may have stolen their luck with it. To ask the question, "Where are you going?" of any one who is going on board is equivalent to destroying all his chances for that time. Persons with certain names are held to be of bad omen, the dreaded names being different in different villages.

Humanity's Defects.
"Men boast of their superiority," said a Chicago doctor who has a weakness for philosophizing, "taking it for granted that they are far in advance of all other things that live here on earth. It is true that they have some wonderful achievements to their credit, but did you ever see a horse, for instance, that was cross eyed? Compare the number of deformities among children with those of young animals, and you will find that among all the horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, dogs, cats and everything else belonging to the animal world there are nowhere near as many congenital deformities as among people. This undoubtedly is due to the fact that the animals live more nearly as nature intended them to than we do. But we mustn't find fault. Think of the specialists who would be working as day laborers if every child came into the world perfect, and our tailors and dressmakers would all be forced out of business if nobody had defects to hide. We must never lose sight of the fact that our shortcomings are art's greatest stimulus."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Short Prayers.
According to the Philadelphia Record, three Methodist ministers, as they were dining together the other day, talked about short prayers. "A prayer short as it was irrelevant," said the first, "was offered up by a soldier before the battle of Waterloo. It was this, 'O God, if there be a God, save my soul if I have a soul.'" "That prayer," said the second minister, "resembled one composed by Bishop Atterbury in the early part of the eighteenth century. It was a prayer for the soldiers about to engage in battle, and it was brief and impressive. 'O God, if I, in the day of battle, I forget thee, do not thou forget me.'" The third minister, after a moment of thought, smiled and said: "When I was a lad I one day dined with two stranger aunts. They set me at the head of the table and bade me say a grace. I was taken aback, for I knew no grace to say, but a text popped into my mind, I rattled it off, and after it was over I realized that it was appropriate enough. It was, 'O Lord, open thou our lips, and our mouths shall show forth thy praise.'"—

A Question.
"Here's something that's been puzzling me," remarked the man who thinks too deeply.
"What's that?"
"If all flesh is grass, are cannibals really vegetarians?"—Philadelphia Press.

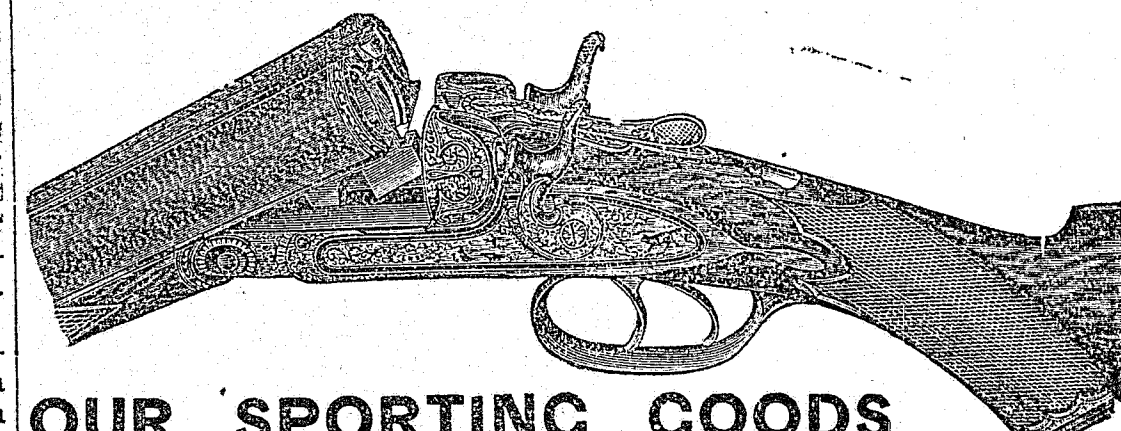

The Bliss of Ignorance.
"A man never knows what he can do till he tries," remarked the wise guy.
"Yes, and then he's often sorry he found out," murmured the simple mug.—Philadelphia Record.
